Inamgaon is a site on the river Ghod, a tributary of the Bhima. Here adults were buried in the ground, laid out straight, with the head towards the north. Sometimes burials were within the houses. Vessels that probably contained food and water were placed with the dead. One man was found buried in a large, four legged jar in the courtyard of a five- roomed house (one of the largest houses at the site), in the center of the settlement. This house also had a granary. The body was placed in a cross- legged position.

  - a. Why were vessels placed in the burials with the dead?
  - b. A granary was found in the house. What does it indicate?
  - c. Give three evidences to prove that the body was of a chief?
